REPORT

CULTIVATING KITCHEN GARDENS

In a commendable display of environmental stewardship and practical learning, students from Poopalambur Al Jamia Arts and Science College participated in the "OJASS" NSS virtual camp by cultivating kitchen gardens around their homes. This initiative, spanning seven days, aimed to promote sustainable agriculture practices and foster a deeper connection to nature among the student community.

Under the guidance of college faculty and NSS program officer Mr Abdul Musabir, students enthusiastically embarked on planting a variety of essential crops including tomatoes, green chilies, pumpkins, and other locally needed plants. The project encouraged students to take responsibility for their immediate environment while learning valuable skills in gardening and sustainable living.

Participants meticulously planned and prepared their garden plots, ensuring suitable soil conditions and optimal plant selection. They diligently sowed seeds or planted seedlings, employing organic methods to nurture their crops and minimize environmental impact. Throughout the duration of the virtual camp, students observed the growth of their plants, documenting progress and overcoming challenges encountered during the cultivation process.

The initiative resonated deeply with the student body, reflecting their commitment to promoting eco-friendly practices and local food production. By cultivating kitchen gardens, students not only beautified their surroundings but also contributed to food security within their community by producing fresh, nutritious produce.

Beyond practical benefits, the kitchen gardening project served as a valuable educational tool, equipping students with hands-on experience in sustainable agriculture. It instilled a sense of environmental responsibility and inspired a proactive approach to addressing food sustainability issues.

The enthusiastic participation and dedication of students in the "OJASS" NSS virtual camp exemplify their proactive role in advocating for sustainable living practices. Their efforts not only contributed to local environmental conservation but also inspired peers and community members to embrace responsible agriculture. Poopalambur Al Jamia Arts and Science College
